MOVIEGRAMS FROM SCREEN TO PATRON

TAKE it from Florence Billings, who is being featured in his first American being featured in his first American motion-ploture production, feminine photoplay fans will go wild over Georges Carpentier. The French fighter is the star of "The Wonder Man," which will be seen at the Victoria next week.
"It's a good job he married before he reached these shores," said Miss Billings to an interviewer in the studio when the production was being made. "He's an awful heartbreaker."
"Why do you say that?" she was asked.

Why? Look at him. He is a great, wholesome boy and the very type it women rave about. That's why I'm raving.

"There's something fascinating about him, even in the very fact that he speaks so little English. It's the first time fir my life that I ever regretted I didn't study French.
"Georges Carpentier is one of the best products of France, and France has surned out some wonderful productions. More than that, I like him because he is more proud of his bride than he is of his neglistic reputation, and that's pugilistic reputation, and that's g some when one has a reputation DERHAPS the movie director was curious to know how it would feel to have a prominent film star as his chaufteur. At any rate, when Thomas Heffron, who harvied the filming of Robert Warwick's new picture. "The City of Masks," at the Arcadia next week, saw the star dressed in the trim week, saw the star dressed in the trim uniform that his characterization of the haro required him to wear, the director neted upon a sudden impulse.

"Say, I've a hurry errand to do down town," he said to Mr. Warwick. "How about driving me down just for a lark?"

"You bet!" conceded the star with a grin.

Some minutes later he steered the big machine neatly alongside the curb in front of a prominent Los Angeles store, and gravely opened the door for Mr. Heffron. Then Mr. Warwick lit a cigarette and leaned nonchalantly against the machine to wait.

All the time a fussy old gentleman had hear saving him from a limousine across

THE title of Harold MacGrath's picture, "The Mollycoddle," in which Douglas Fairbanks will be seen at the Metropolitan Opera House for the first time in Philadelphia, calls to mind the vigorous vocabulary of the late Colonel Roosevelt, who used the term to describe inane, foopish and weak-spined males who avoided their obligation to home and country. Screened under the direction of Tom Geraghty, the picture gives promise of being the best of the Fairbanks visualizations yet made.

The United States is still in its musical childhood, there are youthful diseases to go through. Ragtime is one of these. It has one element of permanent value, its rhythms, and these have already been incorporated into some of the classic ceded or who followed them.

Propora were superior to any who preceded or who followed them.

Incidentally, Porpora himself, who made all this wealth possible, never never the control of the boy's pride, which, as in the case of many singers of his time, was inordinate. Traces of this trail, 'bowever, are still found in some singers and instrumentalists of the present day. But the fact remains that the pupils of Porpora were superior to any who preceded or who followed them.
